Medical Education

An exceptional commitment to the advancement of medical education has been a core St. Luke's focus since its inception in 1872. St. Luke's is one of only 400 members of the prestigious Council of Teaching Hospitals.

In response to the shortage of physicians facing our nation, St. Luke's and the Lewis Katz School of Medicine partnered to develop the first and only medical school campus in the Lehigh Valley. The inaugural class graduated in 2015. Students spend all four years at St. Luke's, and half of graduates either stay with or return to St. Luke's to practice in the greater Lehigh Valley region.

St. Luke's offers more than 550 intern/resident/fellowship positions in 60+ accredited programs. Teaching staff hold faculty appointments at the Lewis Katz School of Medicine, The University of Pennsylvania and Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Additionally, St. Luke's School of Nursing is the nation's oldest continuously operating nursing school. The fully accredited program currently enrolls 150+ students. St. Luke's is also a major allied health training site. Hundreds of students representing dozens of colleges, universities and technical institutes fulfill observation and other educational requirements at St. Luke's. The Network launched its new undergraduate College of Health Sciences in 2026.
